Strategy

Domestic bonds are currently pricing very pessimistic scenarios. The main risk is that the project sent by the Government to the Congress does not contain any details about a restructuring proposal, which still generates significant uncertainty and does not make it attractive to increase exposure to local assets.

For portfolios seeking to maintain some exposure to domestic securities, we suggest to focus on corporate bonds issued by companies with significant exports and dollar denominated revenues, such as TGS, Aeropuertos Argentina 2000, Adecoagro or Arcor.

Potential "Uruguayan style" debt maturities extension for Argentina sovereign bonds: Is a non haircut scenario likely?

Alberto Fernández hinted that his intention regarding debt restructuring would not necessarily be "aggressive". According to the presidential candidate, there is no reason to move forward with a haircut similar to the 2005 restructuring. Both Alberto Fernández and Finance Minister Hernán Lacunza expressed themselves in the same way, favoring a maturities extension without coupon or principal haircut, such as the restructuring carried out by Uruguay in 2003.

Beyond the intention of a "market friendly" debt restructuring process, the question of how sustainable it would be in the near future arises, since the result could be a debt exchange that postpones a possible solvency problem from the short to the medium term, but would not eliminate it, which would eventually lead to another possible restructuring when debt maturities would be due.

Short-term debt maturities reach to what amount? Dollar and pesos denominated bonds principal maturities reach USD 14 billion in 2020 (excluding coupon payments), and by 2021, USD 11.6 billion. In addition, USD denominated Treasury Bills reach USD 9.7 billion and Pesos denominated Treasury Bills, USD 6.4 billion mature in 2020, of which USD 8.2B and USD 4.1B, respectively, have to be paid in the first 5 months of next year.

ARS denominated Bills maturities

USD denominated Treasury Bills Maturities

High maturities concentration in the first half of 2020 makes a maturities extension quite imperative for the Treasury, since the maturities would account for 63% of the Central Bank total reserves (USD 48 billion). In this context, an "Uruguayan-style" restructuring, which was carried out on a total of USD 3.5 billion, would not be so comparable, since the debt amount is significantly higher. Based on the assumption of a liquidity and not solvency problem, an "Uruguayan-style" restructuring with an extension of 5 years would not be sufficient.

Focusing on how solvent the Argentine Treasury would be in the medium term, two questions arise: first, whether the local economy is capable of generating resources in the medium term (that is, whether there are tangible economic growth drivers), and then, whether the resources generated by the economy and captured by the Treasury could be used in debt repayment and not in other expenses (thus, the primary and financial deficit or surplus is relevant). If the answer to both questions is positive, then it would be reasonable to assume that the existing problem is liquidity due to a high concentration of maturities in the short term, and not solvency potentially.

The medium-term outlook does not seem encouraging. GDP, in the period 2011 - 2018, fell 0.5%, a stagnation path from which there is no clear way out. In addition, the debt-to-GDP ratio is at very high levels after the sharp drop in the economy during 2018 and 2019, while the positive effect in exports caused by the depreciation of the local currency is not immediate, and the positive impact could only be seen from late this year or early next, with the new agricultural campaign.

Finally, the government's financial result shows a complex picture, since, although a slight primary surplus is being achieved, the financial deficit still remains significant. The very high fiscal pressure (which reduces the possibility of improving fiscal accounts through a tax increase), and the aforementioned lack of medium-term growth drivers reinforce the negative medium-term outlook if no structural reform takes place.

As a first conclusion, in the current scenario, restructuring with extended terms and without haircut would not be sustainable in the medium term without a positive external shock (for example, a rise in oil prices and a favorable regulation for Vaca Muerta basin), or a deep reform plan carried out by the government that substantially improves public accounts, that even in the immediate could have a recessive effect.

We believe that bond prices, especially shorter duration ones, already discount a restructuring scenario with a large haircut. In order to issue the discounted scenario for sovereign bonds, we carried out a theoretical exercise taking the two shortest and most liquid local law bonds, Bonar 20 (AO20) and Bonar 24 (AY24), with more aggressive restructuring assumptions than the Uruguayan case. In both cases we consider as assumptions an extension of terms up to 10 years, reduction of coupons to 5%, and 30% and 50% principal haircuts.

In the case of the AO20, the 5% coupon once the 30% and 50% deductions are applied, translate into a total annual payment of USD 3.5 and USD 2.5, while for the AY24 the annual payments are USD 2.04 and USD 1.04 respectively. For AY24, the amortization scheme of the last 5 years was maintained.
